APPLES

Of the fruits that delight the eye and please the palate, none is more deserving of praise than the apple. Since prehistoric times apples have been known and their cultivation began in a remote period. With the exception of those regions of extreme heat or cold, apples grow everywhere. Even where the fruit is small the trees are prized for the blossoms. There are almost as many varieties of apples as there are soils and climates, and they differ in size all the way from the Siberian Crab to the pound Pippin, and in flavor from the tart Greening to the insipid Ben Davis. Yet, common as the apple is, it is not commonplace nor has its popularity ever waned. Alongside the peach, the pear, the plum and the apricot, the apple holds by general consent a sort of priority.

Whichever way you eat an apple, whether you pare and halve it with a knife, or following the homespun fashion, eat it out of hand, skins and all, it is good. "An apple a day" may not "keep the doctor away," altogether, but as a wholesome and healthful fruit, the apple is justly famed. Pies may come and pies may go, but apple pies go on forever. As for apple butter, well, there may be better "spreads" but up to date they have not been invented or discovered. Sweet apple cider is the only interesting temperance drink in the world, and oh, boy, think of an apple cobbler swimming in a bowl of jersey cream!

The apple days are here. Fill up the bin. The long evenings have come. Keep the home fires burning in the open fireplace, and likewise a plate or basket of red apples on the table in the living room. As long as there are apples, particularly red apples, life is worth the struggle.

EVOLUTION OF DENTISTRY

Dentistry is coming of age. It is more than an applied science, for it is displaying more vision than is usually associated with the applied sciences.

Primitive dentists, and dental history does not go so far back, were little more than mechanics engaged either to pull or plug. Their two excuses for existence were to make people chew better and look better. Dentistry was a mechanical and aesthetic business.

The real importance of the teeth as a factor in disease and health was discovered only a few years ago. Recent research revealed the critical importance of the teeth in the diagnosis and treatment of disease, as well as in the preservation of health. Added to the dentist's original duties of making people chew with greater comfort and efficiency and smile more beautifully is the duty of helping people feel better and live longer.

There is no more reason why a dentist should be considered adequately prepared for the practice of dentistry without a thorough medical training, just because he can extract and fill teeth expertly, than that a surgeon should be considered adequately prepared for the practice of surgery without a thorough medical training, just because he is adept at cutting and sewing human tissues.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR. Bobby Doyle, framed by Dapper Don Wilkes and his gang and sentenced to prison for twenty years for killing a policeman, is asked to escape from jail by his fiancée, Beebe Barrett. Beebe is assisted by Johnny the Dope, who hides Bobby in a secret apartment in his apartment. The day after Bobby's return, Don Wilkes is visited in his apartment by an over-dressed woman, Bess, who demands medical attention and money for Mike, one of the gang, who is laid up with a gunshot wound. Don refuses the medical attention but gives Bess the money. Because of his love for Beebe and his jealousy of Bobby, he tells Inspector Wilnot and Bobby, who knows he can find Don, before he can enter, Bess appears to tell Don that Mike is dying and wants to see him. As Don goes to leave, Bess enters and denounces him. Don's hand slides toward his coat pocket—Now go on with the story.

CHAPTER XII.
A CRY had broken from Beebe's lips.

Bobby motioned to her. He seemed out of his senses, driven by one obsession.

"Lock the door, sweetheart," he said. "They're going to get me—never had a chance anyway. But they're going to get me for something real this time."

"No, Bobby," Beebe half screamed. Her mind was in chaos. But there came to her now in this instant of desperate need an idea, more than an idea, a wild, last hope.

"Wait!" she cried. "Who is Mike?"

She had interposed herself between him and his loved and his enemy. Wilkes' face was cold. He had not made a gesture or uttered a word of useless defense from the moment that he realized that Bobby knew.

Bobby was frowning at Wilkes. He gestured. "There's only one Mike in the mob—Mike Parfetti. Why ask he that, now?"

"He's got a note," Beebe stammered. "A girl came in here just a few moments ago and gave it to him. It was a note from Mike, confessing something. That's what she said. Because he's dying."

Bobby's eyes narrowed. "I begin to see. Mike Parfetti was hurt that night I was picked up charged with the cop's murder. Mike Parfetti?"

He turned savagely on Wilkes. "Hand over that note!" he ordered.

Dapper Don laughed softly. "You're crazy," he sneered. "You telling me what to do! I'm going to tell you something. I'm going to croak you where you stand. Don't forget I'll be thanked for it. And don't think I'm not going to enjoy it!"

His hand came out of his pocket, and the black barrel of the automatic pointed at Bobby Doyle's heart.

Beebe flung herself in front of Bobby with a scream. But he put her one side.

In the Face of Death

"Don't be afraid," he said. "He hasn't got the nerve to shoot anyone face to face. He's only hoping to scare me till the cops come. But he's scared himself and I know it."

"I am, eh?" Don took sudden aim. Johnny stepped into the room quickly. There was a sharp report. The automatic clattered from Don's fingers. He caught at his side, groaned, and slowly sank to the floor.

"My God!" Bobby gasped. "What happened? What happened? Who did that?"

He glanced at Mary. She was lying on the couch where she had fallen before this. Beebe was white, trembling, unable to find her voice. There was no one else in the room. Bobby glanced towards the opened window. The next instant he heard the sound of rapid footsteps outside in the corridor. A heavy flat beat upon the door. It was kicked open. Biff Aye, Kelley, and another officer came into the room.

It was Kelley who saw the thing first. He gave an exclamation. "Dapper Don—who pulled this?"

The other policeman was on his knees beside the racketeer, shot through the lungs. Chief—he's alive," he said.

"Get an ambulance," Biff ordered. "And gimme that note he has in his fingers."

The officer opened up Don's tightly clenched hand, and Biff took the folded slip of paper. Kelley lifted Don by his shoulders, and the other man caught his legs. They carried him out into the corridor.

A Tangled Tragedy

"That's right," Biff directed. "When he gets to the hospital—put him under guard. Don't let anyone talk to him—understand?"

Through the opened door, there came another officer. "Chief, here's a hot one," he exclaimed. "You know who we picked up right downstairs, just now?"

"No."

"Tony Malotti—he was all do'led up for an organ-grinder—he even had a monkey."

Biff listened in silence, though his eyes gleamed. For the first time he swung his gaze towards Bobby.

"I knew you'd blow back here the first thing," he said. "I didn't even trouble to go looking for you. Now, where's the gun you shot this guy with?"

"I shot him with?" Bobby repeated. "I didn't shoot him—I didn't have a gun."

"You didn't?"

"Biff, I swear I didn't. We were standing right here when bang! goes a gat."

"Where did it come from then?"

"I tell you I don't know. Except, maybe, from the window."

"Wait a minute," said Biff Myers. "I got an idea I got a lot of things wrong." He unfolded the note he still held in his hand.

When he looked up, he nodded. "I guess we've been wrong all along. This note clears you Doyle, and clears you proper."

Biff Myers shook his head. "I'm beginning to understand a lot of things I didn't understand yesterday. I'm going over to see Mike. As for you two, you better keep under cover for a couple of days, till I get everything straightened out. That goes for you, too, Johnny. So long!"

The farm stood on the slope of the hills. The woods rose behind it, but all this part was cleared land. The autumn air was fresh and sweet. A man was coming slowly across the meadow towards the farmhouse.

It was an old place, but as he looked at it, the man smiled. It was his. In the falling light, it moved him in ways he could not understand.

He looked at the long shed where he kept his tools, at the rambling main building with the soft spiral of smoke climbing from the chimney top.

What a struggle it had been! What blunders he had made! But how he had come through it in the end, with experience, with more health than he had ever known, with a sense of peace that was unlike anything he had ever dreamed about. As he drew nearer a woman came to the door. She watched him without speaking. But when he was quite close, he put his arm around her, and held her. They stood together looking out across the fields.

"Better than the racket, Beebe?" the man asked.

"Better than anything, Bobby," she paused. "I had a letter from Mary this afternoon. She's coming up next week. Oh, and she wrote that Johnny is getting better."

"That's good! We'll have him up here as a farm hand yet!"

She smiled at that. "Supper's ready," she said. They went into the house together.

Frank Cox Dies After A Sudden Attack of Illness

Following a sudden attack of illness Frank Cox died at his home here early this morning.

The deceased, the husband of Elizabeth Crosson Cox, was born in England, coming to the United States when a young man. For the past 20 years he had made Bristol his home.

For some time he had been employed at the mill of Thomas L. Leedom Company. Yesterday afternoon he complained of pains in his head, and when it was noticed he did not leave the plant with other workmen, co-workers went to his section to see if he was ill. When found, he had his coat and hat on, but was not able to walk well, and talked very incoherently.

Funeral arrangements have not as yet been completed.

VOTERS MAKE THEIR CHOICE

the importance of the position was pointed out, and the necessity for the selection of a man, who would be qualified to properly perform the duties of the office was emphasized. Through the public press, the voters were enlightened as to the duties of a tax collector, and the relationship which his office bears to the successful financing of the Borough Government was explained. This policy of enlightenment was followed in order that the voters might understand the seriousness involved, before making their selection of a candidate.

The contest for Justice of the Peace resulted in the nomination of James Guy, which is an indorsement by the voters of Governor John Fisher's action in appointing Mr. Guy to fill the unexpired term of the late Frederick I. Kraft, Esq.

Yesterday the voters of the Republican Party went to the polls and expressed their choice of candidates who would best represent them and uphold their views in shaping legislation in the governing body of the Borough, as well as the one whom they thought possessed the best equipment for the position of tax collector. They selected Dr. J. Fred Wagner and John S. Williams, of the First Ward, and Jacob C. Schmidt and Evan Vandegrift, of the Third Ward, as nominees for Councilmen, and Louis B. Gorton as the nominee for the office of tax collector.

After a most enlightening campaign, the object of which was to acquaint the Republican voters of the Borough with the operation of the municipal government and the necessity for care in the selection of candidates for the various offices to be voted for, the contest was brought to a conclusion at the Primary election held yesterday, and the candidates who received the highest number of votes, become the regular nominees of the Republican Party, to be voted for at the general election in November. Now that the voters have passed upon and settled the questions involved, party loyalty and fealty should assure these nominees, that they will receive the united support of all the voters at the coming election in November.

"NEW KONJOLA PROVED ITS MERIT TO ME"

"I Eat and Enjoy Many Things I Dared Not Touch Before," Says Grateful Man

MR. FRANK M. DONAHUE

"For some time I had been bothered with stomach trouble," said Mr. Frank M. Donahue, 214 North Centre street, Pottsville, Pa. "Every meal was more or less of a gamble. It was a question as to whether or not the food I ate would cause suffering. I was bothered by gas, indigestion pains, dizzy spells or just a sick, listless feeling after most of my meals."

"A friend of mine urged me to try this new Konjola, and I decided to give it a chance. I now eat and enjoy many things I dared not touch before, and don't have to worry about after effects. Indigestion pains, gas and dizzy spells are things of the past. I am glad to recommend Konjola. It proved its merits to me. I hope that others will benefit from my experience."

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate store and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)

The New NO-NOX Motor Fuel

Now Aviation Grade

Increased Anti-Knock Properties

AVIATION GASOLINE is the last word in Motor Fuels... It must be... Aviators take no chances... GULF NO-NOX has always maintained the highest standard in "anti-knock" fuels... Today it is stepping into the Aviation class and may be purchased from the Orange Pump for Automobile Fuel.

GULF-NO-NOX is a pure petroleum product and the Orange color is for identification only... It has no effect on NO-NOX efficiency. If you want the best from your motor... use the best fuel... It's economy in the end... In fact the high compression, high speed motor demands NO-NOX.
